time some characteristic silhouettes, that are accurate likenesses of Japanese; and to give you an idea of the singular manner in which they tie their hair, I add a coloured drawing of our porter.

I am now going to pack up all these subjects of natural history, and send the boxes to Europe by the ship on board which I have hitherto remained. For my own part I shall embark immediately for the north-western coast of America, where I hope also to form an interesting collection.

MONTHLY RETROSPECT OF POLITICS.

WE have now nearly reached the period when the changes effected in the political state of Europe, by a few month's negotiation, will exhibit the talents of Bonaparte, as effective and preponderating in the cabinet, as his genius is rapid and irresistible in the field. The scenes passing on the Tagus and Scheld cannot for a moment withdraw his eye from the unfortunate Francis; the latter and his ministry, fascinated by their powerful enemy, seem to have lost all capacity of providing for their safety; and the event will show that they have absolutely submitted their very existence as a nation to the future discretion of the conqueror. We may fairly assume that peace has already been concluded, and that the late Austrian empire will not, as after the peace of Presburg, be left in a condition speedily "to abuse Bonaparte's generosity." Should this be the case, we do not see how he can be charged with severity. He once gave them terms which they had no right to expect a second time at his mercy—and would not we ourselves, would not the British nation in such a case, provide against future injury from the wounded pride of those they had humbled?

Sweden also, has been obliged to purchase her existence as a nation by the sacrifice of almost half her territory. The maxim of her late king, "restoration of the Bourbons, no peace with the French government," has produced its due effect, in the fall of the weaker party. The notion of eternal war, which is now a favourite with many, is most abhorrent to the natural feelings of mankind; it is equally subversive of society, repugnant to justice, and contrary to the spirit of christianity. War should be considered by governments as an extreme case, and carried on for some specific and justifiable object; not waged indefinitely, to gratify individual caprice, or for something which its advocates can never sufficiently explain. The latter could never take place, nor nations become instruments in the hands of ambitious statesmen,
